Biographical

The Donald Beaty Bloch Children’s Literature Collection grew from Bloch’s lifelong interest in books. Bloch began acquiring children’s books as a boy and spent the latter part of his life as a book dealer, running the Collector’s Center antiquarian bookstores in Denver and Central City. He received a bachelor’s degree in journalism and master’s degree in English literature from Northwestern University in 1929. His teaching career at Northwestern was cut short after the University, disapproving of his marriage to a young Ukrainian-born student, Marie Halun, declined to renew his contract. Subsequent posts included Auburn (then Alabama Polytechnic Institute), the University of Tennessee, and the Washington Post. Work as an “information specialist,” writing booklets and articles for the Federal government brought him to Denver, where he opened both the Collector’s Center in 1951 and the Center’s summer branch in Central City. Over 2500 children’s books, together with a much larger selection of books were purchased by Bloch and Denver bookseller Fred Rosenstock from the heirs of Rees Bowen, a retired professor of social science at Dartmouth College. A number of books from this purchase became part of Bloch’s private library of over 15,000 volumes. After Bloch’s his death in 1984, some 12,000 volumes of his collection were donated to Carleton College, from where his granddaughter graduated.¹

Provenance

The Donald Beaty Bloch Collection of Children’s Literature was purchased in 1993 from his widow, Marie Halun Bloch. It complements both the Emily Wood Epsteen Collection of approximately 3,000 children’s books, donated circa 1940, and the Virginia Westerberg Juvenile Literature Collection, a circulating collection donated in 1987 which has grown to over 14,000 books. Charlotta Henseley, one of Virginia Westerburg’s students and former Associate Director for Planning and Development of Special Collections, together with Nora Quinlan, former Director of Special Collections, worked to purchase the Bloch Collection.

Scope and Content

The collection of over 2,000 titles draws primarily from 19th- and early 20th-century American and English children’s books and periodicals, a large number of which are illustrated. Tracts and books with moral or religious themes form a large part of the collection.

The collection is uncatalogued. Books and serials are listed in title order. There are 2,526 titles.

For SERIALS, incomplete volumes or years are indicated by parentheses, e.g.: (1857) lacks some issues for that year. Gaps in holdings are indicated by commas, e.g.: 1845, 1848-49: we do not own 1846 through 1847.

This is an uncorrected draft; there may be stylistic variations in capitalization, etc.

Administrative

Access to holdings in the Bloch Collection may be made through an on-line accession list through a PDF file link on the Special Collections web site in Chinook. Access is not restricted.

The checklist for the Donald Beaty Bloch Collection of children's books was compiled over several years by volunteer Judy Trenholme and student assistants Chris Wilson and Melanie MacRae.
